

Councilman George McEwan has served Centerville with integrity for the past six years. He knows that leadership is not about self. A true leader develops the common consent of the group they serve. George has demonstrated this by working collaboratively with the Council on solutions to many problems over the years.

George has always put the community first. Whether dealing with UTA and bus rapid transit, or external pressures to increase property density, he has never wavered in ensuring Centerville's council has the data needed to make informed decisions and is not subjected to the agenda of the "greater Wasatch Front".

As an effective leader, his track record of solving problems without seeking self-aggrandizement is clear. He helped lead Utah's efforts on the pandemic response as the IT Director for the Utah Department of Health and Centerville directly benefited from his knowledge. On the ground during our hillside fire, earthquake, and windstorm, George has earned the respect of the first responder community.

He has a lifetime of service to his country as a decorated combat veteran and shows his commitment to his community with everyday unsung acts of service.
